About the Conference

The International Conference on Health, Safety and Environment (HSE 2026) provides an interdisciplinary platform for researchers, academicians, industry professionals, policymakers, practitioners, and students to exchange knowledge and innovative ideas related to health, occupational safety, environmental protection, and sustainable development. The conference is closely aligned with the United Nations Sustainable Development Goal 3 (SDG 3): Good Health and Well-Being, which emphasizes ensuring healthy lives and promoting well-being for people of all ages. In the modern era of rapid industrialization, urbanization, technological development, and environmental change, protecting human health and ensuring safe workplaces have become essential global priorities.

The conference will focus on emerging challenges and solutions in occupational health, industrial safety, process safety, environmental management, pollution prevention, disaster risk reduction, public health, climate resilience, and sustainable technologies. Special emphasis will be placed on innovative approaches for preventing occupational injuries and diseases, improving workplace well-being, reducing environmental hazards, and developing safer and healthier communities.

All the accepted papers will be published in an ISBN indexed conference proceedings (ISBN: 978-93-344-9262-0) and some of the selected papers will be published in International Journals.
